

Civilian Conservation Corps

CCC

History

One of the rock walls built by the CCC at Lake Walcott State Park

History:

- In the 1930's President Franklin Delano Roosevelt established the Civilian Conservation Corps (CCC). It was a "New Deal" relief program for unemployed youth.
- In 1933 the Civilian Conservation Corps set up a camp at what is now Lake Walcott State Park.
- This camp was responsible for many of the rock walls and the rock lining of the canals which are still seen at the park today.
- The camp was closed in 1941 and dismantled by the army. The area was turned into a popular fishing, swimming and picnicking area which continues today.

Visit your local Library and check out books on the CCC and other New Deal programs.

Explore Idaho with Scout the Fox!

Scout

Civilian Conservation Corps

CCC

History

Significance in Idaho

- The west was suffering through the Dust Bowl and the Great Depression. Idaho acted quickly and was able to secure camps through the Civilian Conservation Corps.
- The Civilian Conservation Corps put millions of young men to work. These young men worked to change the landscape of Idaho.
- The CCC had many jobs including firefighting, landscaping, forestation, irrigation and that is just to name a few.

Stairs created by the CCC at Lake Walcott State Park

Idaho Department of Parks and Recreation

parksandrecreation.idaho.gov

Portals to Parks

Civilian Conservation Corps

CCC

History

Fun Facts!

- Idaho had 86,000 enrollees.
- Idaho had the largest number of CCC camps in relation to its population in the United States.
- To be selected, enrollees had to be unmarried, between the ages of 17 and 25, willing to assign their earning to their family, and be fit enough to serve.

EXPLORE MORE

- Check out this site:
www.lib.uidaho.edu/digital/cccidaho/about.html
- Visit your local Library and check out books on the CCC and other New Deal programs.
- Check out your local history museum to see if they have pictures and possible artifacts.

Thank you to the University of Idaho and the Idaho State Historical Society